William J. Jacobs House
Lonaconing
Private

ca.1910

The house is a frame, two story, gable-roofed building on a poured concrete foundation. Its plan resembles an irregular cross with a two-bay-wide section running E-W and a narrower section running N-S that terminates in bay windows on its gable ends. The roofline of the E-W block is higher than that of the other section and dips at the point where the two ridgelines cross. The facade is located on the east gable end where a one story porch extends across its length and around to the north side. The rear is covered by a two level porch that extends across the east and south elevations.

The building's balloon frame is sheathed in diagonally laid board and then covered with weatherboard and cornerboards. The gables above the bay windows have weatherboard set in a chevron pattern. One over one sash windows with plain board surrounds and molded lintels are arranged singly and in pairs on all elevations. Louvered shutters flank all but the east and west attic-level windows. The exterior doors on the facade, north elevation, and rear are topped by transom lights.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The William J. Jacobs House is located at the end of an unnamed dirt road on the south side of Swamp Road. This road is accessible .2 mile west of Avilton-Lonaconing Road. The house is situated approximately 1.5 miles down this road in Cucumber Hollow. The site includes the house, a barn, a spring-house, a root cellar, and two small sheds.

The house is a frame, two story, gable-roofed building on a poured concrete foundation. Its plan resembles an irregular cross with a two-bay-wide section running E-W and a narrower section running N-S that terminates in bay windows on its gable ends. The roofline of the E-W block is higher than that of the other section and dips at the point where the two ridgelines cross. The facade is located on the east gable end where a one story porch extends across its length and around to the north side. The rear is covered by a two level porch that extends across the east and south elevations.

The building's balloon frame is sheathed in diagonally laid board and then covered with weatherboard and cornerboards. The gables above the bay windows have weatherboard set in a chevron pattern. One over one sash windows with plain board surrounds and molded lintels are arranged singly and in pairs on all elevations. Louvered shutters flank all but the east and west attic-level windows. The exterior doors on the facade, north elevation, and rear are topped by transom lights.

The roof is covered with square and hexagonal grey slate tiles and has a box cornice with partial gable end returns on the east and west elevations and full returns on the north and south elevations. An interior brick stove chimney is located south of the ridgeline on the east endwall.

The facade porch is supported by seven wooden Tuscan columns. The first floor of the rear porch is supported by five turned posts with a turned baluster railing between them. The second floor level is enclosed and lit by a continuous row of one over one sash windows.

The interior plan has a northwest stair hall that leads to a center passage. A room is located on each side of this passage and the kitchen, which includes a pantry and a back staircase, is located in the rear.

All interior woodwork is oak. The stairway is a two flight run with nine treads rising to a landing then rising four more treads to the right. Turned balusters compose the railing and the square newel post is decorated with sunburst and rope-edged panels. The fireplace, located in the room south of the center passage, is flanked by two square columns and topped by a rectangular, bevel-edged mirror. The window surrounds are flat board with rounded corners.

The root cellar is set into a bank just northeast of the house. Its walls are constructed of coursed, dressed stone. The interior is whitewashed and covered by a gable roof.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The William Jacobs family lived in this house. The irregular cross plan, and the exterior and interior ornamentation indicate the former elegance of this house and the relative prominence of its previous owners.

(#7 continued DESCRIPTION)

G-I-C-066 William J. Jacobs House

The springhouse, which sits east of the house, is a balloon frame building on a stone foundation with a gable roof that projects over the entrance (N elevation). The exterior is covered with weatherboard siding and the roof is covered with wood shingles. A six pane window pierces the south elevation. The interior is lined with whitewashed horizontal board and a plank floor. A concrete trough is located outside the building directly in front of the entrance, sheltered by the projecting gable roof.

Two small, gable-roofed, board and batten sheds are situated south of the springhouse.

A frame bank barn on a coursed, squared stone foundation is located several hundred yards northeast of the house.
